The processing site is Bedeye, equipped with 350 drying beds and capable of handling Washed, small Natural, and Honey-processed coffees. The station has been actively recruiting and training out-grower farmers.

Each year, the team visits farmers, explains the partnership, signs agreements covering cherry purchase prices and commissions, and provides training on organic farming practices, including using compost instead of chemical fertilizers.

After harvest, fresh cherries are brought to Bedeye, where they are pulped and washed to remove remaining mucilage. This process is repeated daily throughout the harvest period.
