

ABOUT THIS COFFEE

This coffee comes from family-owned farms located in the municipality of La Unión, in northern Nariño, one of Colombia’s most recognized specialty coffee origins. Grown between 1,600 and 1,900 meters above sea level, the coffee benefits from fertile volcanic soils, good drainage, and the diverse microclimatic conditions created by the surrounding mountain ranges, including the Cerro de Reyes area. These environmental conditions contribute to the production of dense, high-quality beans and support the development of distinctive regional cup profiles.

The farms are managed by coffee-growing families who have cultivated coffee for generations and maintain diversified production systems where coffee grows alongside plantain, avocado, citrus trees, cassava and other crops. This diversification not only provides additional sources of income and food security but also contributes to shade management, farm resilience and landscape biodiversity.
