Several common coffee varieties are found in the Guji region, many of which are named after indigenous trees. Among the most popular are Bedessa, and Sawa. In Uraga, many farmers are Gedeo settlers. They probably moved with their varieties (Dega, Kurume and Walisho). In addition to these local varieties, there are also JARC-developed varieties like 74 110 that share similarities with the indigenous ones.

Uraga coffee, named after the woreda (district) where it is harvested, belongs to the Guji appellation. This region has a long-standing coffee tradition. The fertile highlands here support a polyculture agricultural system, enabling farmers to grow food crops alongside coffee on the same plots of land.
